

Online piano teacher wanted

Over the last two years I have successfully filled my timetable with online piano students from around the world. I love my job but there are only so many hours in the day! So I'm looking for a piano teacher to work for my business MusicLessonsAnywhere.

This is a freelance opportunity to take on new students when required.

I am willing to share my extensive teaching experience, resources and knowledge with the right candidate. I can offer a week long residential training opportunity if appropriate. I will consider both newly qualified and experienced teachers. You must have have passed Grade 8 piano or equivalent.

I offer an hourly rate of 25 euros, with the possibility of rising to 30 euros in 2016, minus 25% for commission and administration.

The new MusicLessonsAnywhere teacher should ideally have:

- Patience.
- ABRSM Exam Board experience.
- The ability to teach students to play from a score and also develop improvisation skills.
- The ability to teach pop as well as classical composition.
- Knowledge and use of a range of teaching resources (on and off-line) rather than sticking with the same course book.
- The ability to respond to the needs of each individual student, whether for improvisation practice, technique or exam work.
- The most important factor, which is making lessons thoroughly enjoyable for all students at all times.
- A sense of humour and ability to engage with the student and tease out the best from them.

Teachers will need to give each student follow up notes and two mock exams per student when required.

Application deadline: 5th November. Interviews for this post will be via Skype.

The successful candidate will need to provide invoices with their tax number.

If you think you might fit the bill please contact me with your CV: tracyrose@musiclessonsanywhere.net

<http://musiclessonsanywhere.net/>